The Mershon Center for International Security Studies is pleased to welcome two visiting scholars for 2012-13.

Yousef Ali, professor of sociology at Kuwait University, is working with Mershon Center director Craig Jenkins and affiliate Katherine Meyer on the Kuwaiti portion of their research project about cycles of dissent and repression in the Middle East. Ali’s research focuses on the causes of recent political violence among Kuwaiti citizens. He is studying variables such as sect, degree of religiosity, Arabism, and tribalism find the most important variables in encouraging violence.

Ali has published works on the distribution of power, transition toward more democratization of the society, social and political rights of women, stateless people and their rights in a democratic society, and minorities and citizenship.

Maria Eugenia S.A.C. Fernandes is on a Fulbright Scholarship working with Abril Trigo at the Center for Latin American Studies on research into the World Cafe, an innovative way to host meaningful conversations in several fields.

In Brazil, Fernandes teaches a course for environmental educators working with participatory methodologies. She is also pursuing a doctorate in education at the University of Sao Paulo, with a dissertation on “Building a territory of meaning through dialogue: an educative praxis analysis at the APA Embu Verde,” a protected area in Embu, a suburb of Sao Paulo.

Previously Fernandes worked on an international project funded by CIRAD, France, to develop a participatory process for water resources management. In this research she analyzed and developed role-playing games for watershed management.

Military history conferences highlight spring

While spring semester has a full line-up of speakers scheduled to visit the Mershon Center, also of note are two upcoming conferences in military history.

On April 12-13, the Mershon Center will host Grand Strategies and Alliances, organized by Mason Chair in Military History Peter Mansoor. This working conference will focus on problems inherent in alliance politics and relationships from the 100 Years’ War to the 1991 Gulf War. Participants will examine myriad factors that have made alliances work in the past through the context of grand strategy.

The keynote speaker is Gen. James N. Mattis, commander of U.S. Central Command.

During Maymester, the biannual graduate symposium Military Frontiers will take place on Friday, May 10. Organized by history doctoral students Will Waddell, Ian Johnson, and Daniel Curzon, this year’s theme is “Beyond Battle.” Presentation topics include logistics, civil defense, and propaganda.

The keynote speaker is Adam Tooze of Yale University, author of Wages of Destruction: The Making and Breaking of the Nazi Economy.

Graduate affiliates

Seung-Ook Lee, a doctoral student in geography, stands at the border between China and North Korea at Dandong. Last year Lee served as an advanced research scholar for Northeast Asian Studies at Jilin University in Changchun, China, working on his dissertation, “Is North Korea Becoming China’s Colony?”

Maria Eugenia S.A.C. Fernandes is on a Fulbright Scholarship working with Abril Trigo at the Center for Latin American Studies on research into the World Cafe, an innovative way to host meaningful conversations in several fields.
